DESCRIPTION OF THE ADVERTISEMENT

This outdoor advertisement for Child's Play features a doll with red eyes wearing a striped shirt and overalls with the word 'Buddi' embroidered on them. The doll is holding a knife. Empty Buddi doll packages can be seen in the background and the words 'Time to Play' are in the top right-hand corner and details of the movie are at the bottom.

THE COMPLAINT

A sample of comments which the complainant/s made regarding this advertisement included the following:

The image is of a killer doll with a large knife. The doll is intentionally very scary and the image is not suitable for locations such as bus stops where young children view them when traveling on public transport or driving past in their vehicles. The movie is for mature viewing and therefore the advertising should only be viewed by older audiences if the intention is to frighten the audience.

It is a frightening image and not suitable for any children. Given the rating of this movie the advertising of this should be kept to places where adults and those old enough to find the information can do so themselves. It should not be forced upon small innocent children or anyone for that matter.

Appearance of a child to young children being suggestive usage/intent with holding a knife dangerously. Ad has no means to not display to children via viewing schedule. Knife crime is a serious issue and with no means to counter educate children from passing a advert of that nature promoting entertainment value for adults versus the real issue and dangers of knives in minors hands is the actual horror story

THE ADVERTISER'S RESPONSE

Comments which the advertiser made in response to the complainant/s regarding this advertisement include the following:

The outdoor creative contains no discriminatory material, strong or obscene language, nudity, no material contrary to health and safety standards or supernatural themes. The creative depicts a doll holding a knife (which could potentially be seen as scary) however this is the main character from the film being advertised and accordingly unavoidable. The creative was also approved by all outdoor media suppliers prior to us going to print/ booking the sites.

THE DETERMINATION

The Ad Standards Community Panel (Panel) considered whether this advertisement breaches Section 2 of the AANA Code of Ethics (the Code).

The Panel noted the complainants' concerns that the advertisement:

- features a threatening image of a doll holding a knife;
- is too scary for display in areas where children are likely to view it, including in the vicinity of schools;
- is for a movie rated MA which is not appropriate to advertise where children can see it;
- features an image of a child holding a knife which is dangerous.

The Panel viewed the advertisement and the noted advertiser's response.

The Panel noted that this outdoor advertisement was promoting the movie 'Child's Play'. The Panel noted that the advertisement features a static image of a doll with red eyes holding a knife. Details of the movie are displayed along with the tagline 'time to play'.

The Panel noted the complainants' concerns that it is inappropriate to advertise a movie rated for adults to a child audience.

The Panel acknowledged that some members of the community would prefer for this type of product not to be advertised where children are likely to see it, however considered that this product is legally able to be advertised in a public space. The Panel considered that the provisions of the Code do not cover the placement of advertisements and that it was only able to consider the content of the advertisement itself.

The Panel considered whether the advertisement was in breach of Section 2.3 of the Code. Section 2.3 states: "Advertising or Marketing Communications shall not present or portray violence unless it is justifiable in the context of the product or service advertised".

The Panel noted the complainants' concerns that the advertisement features a threatening and scary image which would be particularly frightening to a young audience.

The Panel considered that the doll in the advertisement was holding what appears to be a large knife, but considered that this knife was not being held in a threatening position which indicated the doll was attacking anyone. The Panel considered that there was no blood or gore in the advertisement and no actual violence depicted. The Panel considered that the dark colours of the advertisement, combined with the red-eyed-doll holding a knife did give the advertisement a menacing tone, but considered that the low level of menace was justifiable in the context of an advertisement for a horror movie.

In the Panel's view there was no violence portrayed in the advertisement, and that the menacing tone was justifiable in the context of the product advertised and did not breach Section 2.3 of the Code.

The Panel considered Section 2.6 of the Code. Section 2.6 of the Code states: "Advertising or Marketing Communications shall not depict material contrary to Prevailing Community Standards on health and safety".

The Panel noted the complainants' concern that the advertisement depicts a child holding a knife dangerously and that this undermined knife safety messages around the dangers of knives in minors hands.

The Panel acknowledged that the issue of safe handling and storage of knives is important to most members of the community and that most members of the community would consider it unsafe for children to hold knives.

The Panel however considered that most people, even children, viewing the advertisement would understand the character to be a doll and not a child. The Panel considered that the doll character in the advertisement was not depicted in an aspirational manner, and that the advertisement was not encouraging children to pick up knives or hold knives in a threatening manner. The Panel considered that the depiction of the doll in the advertisement would not undermine important health and safety messages around knife safety.

In the Panel's view the depiction of the doll holding a knife was not a depiction that would be contrary to prevailing community standards on health and safety. The Panel determined that the advertisement did not breach Section 2.6 of the Code.

Finding that the advertisement did not breach the Code on other grounds, the Panel dismissed the complaints.
